AIESEP Symposium

Physical Literacy: A Design Thinking Approach

The AIESEP design thinking workshop is an opportunity to engage in a 'design sprint' to innovate and iterate new pedagogies to promote physical literacy in the 21st century PE, sport and physical activity contexts. We invite all those who have a vested interest in promoting physical literacy amongst children and young people to join us in this unique workshop setting.

This symposium follows on from the Physical Literacy roundtable in AIESEP 2019 (Adelphi)... Giving us the opportunity to continue this important conversation!

FEBRUARY 26-28, 2020

11th Biennial of ARIS

*Shaping physically educated citizens:
A challenge for school, sport and recreation professionals*

The ARIS (Association for Research on Intervention in Sport) mobilizes a French-speaking (but not only!) international community of researchers, doctoral students and practitioners interested in the analysis of the practices of education, teaching, learning and training in the different contexts of physical, sport and artistic activities.

One of the characteristics of the 11th ARIS Biennial is to place practitioners and their trainers at the heart of the exchanges, with a view to creating links between researchers and field workers and to better understand the conditions that will allow participants to benefit from the contributions of sports pedagogy research. In addition, the conference will open a critical discussion on the concepts mobilized in the current evolution of the missions of physical educators.

Guy Namurois Symposium

Hidden qualities of the coach

The aim of the 4th Guy Namurois symposium will be to reveal to the public important qualities that are essential to become a successful coach and are not always visible. Supported by scientific experts and by the testimony of successful coaches and athletes, the conference will focus on the coach's teaching skills, his reflexivity and his relationship with the staff and athletes. The debates will highlight the importance of a holistic and humanistic approach of coaching.
